

6516207583.txt

I am a customer of XM satellite radio and I feel if they want to offer local services, then let them, especially if they put National Weather service alerts on the weather channels. I only listen to XM radio and if they can not give local weather because a lobbying group called NAB does not want them to, doesn't that not only violate the first amendment but create a safety issue. I think this whole situation is asinine and that if NAB does not want to lose people then they must compete for the consumer just like any other business would have to.